The book is divided into four parts. The first part provides an overview of the history of exploration in the American West. The second part profiles some of the most important early American naturalists, including John James Audubon, John Muir, and Mary Austin. The third part examines the different ways that these naturalists studied the West, including their use of field notes, drawings, and photographs. The fourth part discusses the legacy of these early naturalists and their impact on our understanding of the American West.

The book is profusely illustrated with beautiful images of the West, and it includes essays by leading historians and scientists. It is a must-read for anyone interested in the history of exploration, the natural world, or the American West.
