Meet the Visionaries Behind Foxfire

The Foxfire legacy was born in the quaint town of Rabun Gap, Georgia, in 1966. Inspired by the desire to preserve a vanishing way of life, high school students came together under the guidance of English teacher Eliot Wigginton to create a literary magazine that would chronicle the traditions of their elders.

Over the years, the Foxfire students conducted countless interviews with local farmers, craftspeople, musicians, and healers. Their meticulously recorded stories not only painted a vivid portrait of life in the Appalachian Mountains but also sparked a national movement that encouraged students across the country to document their own local heritage.
