Munch was born in Løten, Norway, in 1863. He studied art in Oslo and Paris, and his early work was influenced by the Impressionists and Post-Impressionists. In the 1890s, Munch developed his own unique style, which he called "Expressionism." Expressionism is characterized by its use of bold colors, distorted forms, and exaggerated emotions. Munch's Expressionist paintings often depict the human condition in all its rawness and vulnerability.

In addition to his paintings, Munch also produced a significant body of prints and drawings. His prints are often more experimental and personal than his paintings, and they often explore dark and disturbing themes. Munch's drawings are often more intimate and revealing than his other work, and they provide a valuable glimpse into his inner world.

Munch's work has been exhibited all over the world, and he is considered one of the most important artists of his time. His work has been the subject of numerous books and articles, and he has been the inspiration for many other artists. Munch's work continues to resonate with people today, and it is sure to continue to inspire and challenge for generations to come.
