A. What is the moral message of the story behind this painting?

David Bailey said this to his art, the objects in this painting all point to the finiteness of human existence. Life on earth is a brief and transitory as an extinguished candle, a fragile bubble, a toppled glass, or faded flower. The hourglass and skull are reminders of death, which is always close by.

B.

The Self-Portrait indicates the beginning of Van Gogh's new stage, bringing to the forefront his newly acquired knowledge of human anatomy and artistic elements reflected in the big eyes and deep trough of the nose. The painting shows a man in a dark coat and hat, looking down at his right hand which is wrapped in a white bandage. The background is a simple, outdoor setting with a plain background.

DESCRIPTION:

The artist further added to the composition of this portrait by limiting his palette to cool blue, brown and grey tones that, in combination, appear luminous and produce a gentle undulating rhythm across the surface of the painting.

###

A Journey of Self-Discovery
