Earthquake insurance is a type of insurance that covers damage to your home and belongings caused by an earthquake. It's not required by law in California, but it's highly recommended. If you don't have earthquake insurance, you could be on the hook for thousands of dollars in repairs if your home is damaged in an earthquake.

The Earthquake Insurance Longitudinal Study of California Homeowners is a comprehensive study that provides valuable insights into earthquake risks and insurance coverage for California homeowners. The study was conducted by the University of California, Berkeley, and the California Earthquake Authority (CEA). It surveyed over 10,000 California homeowners about their earthquake insurance coverage and their experiences with earthquake damage.

The study found that only about a third of California homeowners have earthquake insurance. This is a surprisingly low number, given the high risk of earthquakes in the state. The study also found that homeowners who have earthquake insurance are more likely to be satisfied with their coverage and are more likely to feel prepared for an earthquake.

If you're considering getting earthquake insurance, the Earthquake Insurance Longitudinal Study of California Homeowners is a valuable resource. The study provides detailed information about earthquake risks in California, the different types of earthquake insurance coverage available, and the costs and benefits of earthquake insurance.

Benefits of Earthquake Insurance

There are many benefits to getting earthquake insurance, including:
